Detecting Transcultural Identity
in European Popular Crime Narratives

This project has received funding from the European Union's Horizon 2020 research and innovation programme under grant agreement No. 770151

Detecting Transcultural Identity in European Popular Crime Narratives

European Union's Horizon 2020
Research and Innovation Programme

DETECT investigates the topics of identity and popular culture and aims to show how, from 1989 to the present, the transnational circulation of crime narratives from various European countries has fostered the formation of a plural transcultural European identity. The project involves 13 universities and 5 players from the creative sector in 10 countries. Its research activities have been planned to address the interest of numerous stakeholders, including professionals, scholars, teachers, students and policymakers. It aims to promote transcultural exchange and support research on the topic of European identity through public events, digital resources, and innovative learning tools.

General objectives

To investigate and promote

→ To investigate and promote the role of popular culture in fostering dialogue between different national, local, linguistic and cultural communities, so as to highlight its contribution to the formation of a plural and shared European identity.

To detect and analyse

→ To detect and analyse transnational production, distribution and consumption practices that, in the context of popular culture and crime genre, encourage the emergence of engaging representations of European identity.

To develop

→ To develop a working methodological framework to investigate the representations of European transcultural identity in different genres of popular culture.

To elaborate

→ To elaborate new teaching methods aimed to promote transnational as well interdisciplinary collaboration in the field of human sciences across the continent.

Main activities

- Case studies and case histories from the crime genre in Europe: forms of production and circulation, transcultural expressions in media representations.
- Conferences and meetings between scholars and professionals/Events and contests addressed to students, fans, and the general public.
- Reports and policy briefs for professionals in the creative industries and policymakers.
- Innovative educational resources; creation of a virtual learning community; creation of a Massive Open Online Course and of a digital Atlas of European crime narratives; development of an App dedicated to the genre's most iconic locations.

Research plan

The research is structured into eight work packages:

WP1 Project management

WP2 Setting the frame. A new methodology for the study of transnational popular culture

WP3 Building the infrastructure. Resources and tools for the semantic mapping of European transcultural identity

WP4 Creative industries. Media production and location marketing strategies for a transcultural European space

WP5 Creative audiences. Distribution, accessibility and meaning-making of transcultural European contents

WP6 Transcultural representations. Images of Europe and Europeans in contemporary European popular culture

WP7 Dissemination and communication

WP8 Ethics requirements

Research questions

- ❓ What are the media systems involved in the production and circulation of both written and screened crime fiction, and what are the differences among them?
- ❓ How have funding strategies and practices of publishing, producing, distributing and translating developed across the continent, from 1989 to the present?
- ❓ How do local, national, and transnational media policies affect the publication, production, distribution, and translation of crime narratives across the continent?
- ❓ How do adaptation and serialization of crime fiction impact the production, translation, and circulation of European crime titles from 1989 to the present?
- ❓ What is the relationship between the territorial marketing and cultural tourism strategies adopted by local institutions across the continent and the consolidated trend towards the "regionalization" of the European crime genre?
- ❓ What are the factors that encourage audience engagement in, and consumption of, the European crime fiction? How is this engagement expressed in relation to the issue of European identity?
- ❓ What are the main themes and figures through which European transcultural identity is represented in the contemporary crime genre?
- ❓ How do factors such as translation, serialization, and adaptation strategies affect the representations of European identity?
- ❓ How do narrative spaces and places affect the representations of European identity?
- ❓ How can research in popular culture promote the formation of a plural and shared European identity?

The Stakeholder Network will encourage the involvement of players from the creative sector in the DETECT research and dissemination activities, promoting exchange and communication between scholars and professionals. Among the initiatives: round table meetings, workshops, panel discussions at events organized by the project or other institutions, interviews for research, training or promotion purposes.
